The pilet, David Jackson, but seldom leaves the pilot house while the steemer is in motion and the engineer whose custom it is to go on the upper dick whenever the boat stops, was unfortunately, in this instance, detained below in conversation with a passenger; otherwise, by being present near the office, he might have prevented the robbery. After a short absence Capt. Garra-

The Carolina Central-Looking for a Western Outlet.

There seems to be well founded reports, from reliable sources, that the wners of the Carolina Central Railway are looking for an outlet for their line, via Asheville or Cranberry, or by both routes, to the great West. One of the plans proposed, we understand, is to build a narrow guage road from Hickory to the Cranberry Iron Ores, via Lenoir, in Caldwell county, and thence to the line of the Virginia & Tennessee & Cumberland Gap Railroad. Another plan is to join
